Eph 4: 1-6

Jn 6: 1-15

In last week's first reading, the king of Israel (Jeroboam II), through the priest Amaziah, tells the prophet of God to get out of town. Interesting, isn't it? The king of Israel thinks he can get God out of his life ... yet ... we know the King of kings is in his very flesh. Talk about a guy trying to run away from himself!

Let's stay on this theme from the Old Testament in this week's and next week's reflection. And, it will make more sense next week. (There are some deep things to be found.) Worldly seems to always over take the prophets (or God). This connection between the worldly and the prophetic may seem under worldly rule ... but not so fast. Its sacrificial system is constantly accompanied by prophetic disquiet and questioning. As early as the time of the first king of Israel (Saul), we meet a primordial word of prophecy that, with some variations, runs through the Old Testament before being taken up and "being made more perfect" by Christ: "More precious than sacrifice is obedience, submission better than the fat of rams!" (cf. 1 Samuel 15:22) In Hosea the prophecy appears in this form: "For I desire steadfast love and not sacrifice, the knowledge of God, rather than burnt offerings" (Hs 6:6).

In this week's gospel we see Jesus going from Old Testament to New Testament. He sent out His primordial church into the world. He begins the perfection of the Old Testament way of doing things. In the mouth of Jesus it assumes a very simple and elementary form: "I desire mercy, and not sacrifice" (Mt 9:13; 12:7). Thus Temple worship was always accompanied by a sense of its insufficiency. "If I were hungry, I would not tell you; for the world and all that is in it is mine. Do I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats? Offer to God a sacrifice of thanksgiving, and pay your vows to the Most High" (Ps 50[49]:12-14). The radical critique of the Temple, which (according to the account in Acts 7) Stephen delivered in a fiery speech, is certainly unusual in its form, marked as it is with the new passion of Christian faith, but it is not without precedent in the history of Israel. At the end Stephen takes the key sentence of his critique from the prophet Amos: "I hate, I despise your feasts, and I take no delight in your solemn assemblies. Even though you offer me your burnt offerings and cereal offerings, I will not accept them, and the peace offerings of your fatted beasts I will not look upon. Take away from me the noise of your songs; to the melody of your harps I will not listen" (cf. Amos 5:21-2; Acts 7:42).

[I know this is kind of deep ... but needs to be noted - The whole of St. Stephen's speech is triggered by the accusation that he had said: "Jesus of Nazareth will destroy this place [that is, the Temple], and will change the customs which Moses delivered to us" (Acts 6:14). Stephen responds to this allegation only indirectly, by invoking the line of criticism of Temple and sacrifice that runs through the Old Testament. He quotes the controversial criticism of cult to be found in Amos 5:25-27, the original meaning of which is very hard to decipher. (He uses the version in the Greek Bible, in which all the worship of the forty years in the wilderness is aligned with the worship of the golden calf. This makes Israel's liturgy during the whole of this foundational period seem like a continuation of the first apostasy. "Did you offer to me slain beasts and sacrifices, forty years in the wilderness, O house of Israel? And you took up the tent of Moloch, and the star of the god Rephan, the figures which you made to worship; and I will remove you beyond Babylon" (again: Acts 7:42; cf. Amos 5:25-27)). The very beasts of sacrifice seem here to be a perversion of worship of the one God. (The words of the prophet, used by Stephen in the version of the Alexandrian translators, must have come as a violent shock to his hearers. In fact, he could have added to them the dramatic words of the prophet Jeremiah: "[I]n the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, I did not speak to your fathers or command them concerning burnt offerings and sacrifices" (Jer 7:22)). Stephen refrains from exploiting such texts, which give us a sense of the difficult internal debates in Israel before the Exile. Instead, he adds three other trains of thought to get across his exposition of the message of Christ.]

The world would have peace if only men of politics would follow the Gospels.

Saint Apollinaris

Saint of the Day for July 20
(d. c. 79)

According to tradition, Saint Peter sent Apollinaris to Ravenna, Italy, as its first bishop. His preaching of the Good News was so successful that the pagans there beat him and drove him from the city. He returned, however, and was exiled a second time. After preaching in the area surrounding Ravenna, he entered the city again. After being cruelly tortured, he was put on a ship heading to Greece. Pagans there caused him to be expelled to Italy, where he went to Ravenna for a fourth time. He died from wounds received during a savage beating at Classis, a suburb of Ravenna. A beautiful basilica honoring him was built there in the sixth century.

Reflection

Following Jesus involves risks—sometimes the supreme risk of life itself. Martyrs are people who would rather accept the risk of death than deny the cornerstone of their whole life: faith in Jesus Christ. Everyone will die eventually—the persecutors and those persecuted. The question is what kind of a conscience people will bring before the Lord for judgment. Remembering the witness of past and present martyrs can help us make the often small sacrifices that following Jesus today may require.

What does the Catechism say about work?

Work honors the Creator’s gifts and the talents received from him. It can also be redemptive. By enduring the hardship of work in union with Jesus, the carpenter of Nazareth and the one crucified on Calvary, man collaborates in a certain fashion with the Son of God in his redemptive work. He shows himself to be a disciple of Christ by carrying the cross, daily, in the work he is called to accomplish. Work can be a means of sanctification and a way of animating earthly realities with the Spirit of Christ.

From the Bishop’s Bulletin – Bringing your Faith to Work

In today’s world, bringing faith into the workplace seems like a terrifying prospect. Very few of us want to approach a co-worker to talk about religion, and fewer would even know how to do that. Let me relieve your anxiety. Bringing faith to work doesn’t have to mean overtly talking about your beliefs about divine realities. It’s more about revealing your entire self to the people around you and living the virtues of your Catholic faith in all areas of life. It’s about living an integrated, whole life with God always at the center of the things we do and say. And it’s easier than you might think.

Joe Rutten, parishioner at the Cathedral of Saint Joseph, has noticed most people tend to separate what they do on Sunday from everything else in their lives, especially when they head to work on Monday. He sees that separation, that divided life, as a primary obstacle to uniting our faith and our work. And the cause, he says, is sometimes sin but can also be a lack of understanding....

Thank You

We would like to send a sincere thank you to everyone who organized and helped with the French toast feed that was held as a benefit to help us while Glen recovers from his lung transplant. Also, thank you to everyone who went to the breakfast and donated to it. We cannot tell you in words how much we appreciate the support that we have received from everyone. The outpouring of kindness and sweet gestures has been amazing and has helped us through some difficult times while Glen has been fighting for his life and now is recovering from his lung transplant surgery. Thank you for all the prayers, as well, and please continue to pray for Glen to continue to improve and heal quickly. His fight is not over, but it's much better than it was.

Thanks again for all the support in so many forms,
Glen and Val Hohn
